PREDICTS WEALTH FOR CUBA. Detailed information on the economic condition of Cuba will be laid before the British government next week by Lionel Carden, British Consul General at Havans, who has arrived in London on a brief vacation.

In his report Mr. Carden deals briefly with Cuba's future as a sugar-producing country, proceeding on the hypothesis that her output in the course of a few years will far exceed the demands of the American market and therefore become a strong competitive factor in the general sugar market of the world. "All signs," he says, "point to a tremendous development of the sugar industry in Cuba along the soundest economic lines. The crop of this year is 600,000 tons, owing half of that year before. Next year the production will reach at least 800,000 tons. I cannot see anything to prevent the total output in a short time reaching 1,500,000 tons a year."

Mr. Carden predicts future tranquility and prosperity for the Pearl of the Antilles. He says the majority of Cubans like hard work and peace. The government, however much money it may necessarily disburse will have plenty to fall back upon, owing to the riches of the land,
